84th Annual Conference

DETAILED PROGRAM

JANUARY 2-5, 2013

ORLANDO, FLORIDA

Welcome TO THE City of Orlando

Mayor Buddy Dyer
P.O. Box 4990
Orlando, FL 32802-4990

"The City Beautiful"

CITY OF ORLANDO

GREETINGS,

As Mayor of the City of Orlando, it is my pleasure to welcome you to the “City Beautiful” and to the Southern Political Science Association 84th Annual Conference.

Orlando is a City on the rise.

I encourage those of you visiting Orlando to experience all of the things that make Orlando one of the fastest growing, most business-friendly and quality of life-centered cities in our nation.

Underneath a skyline that has doubled in just the last five years, our dynamic, bustling Downtown is alive with fine dining, exciting night life, fabulous shopping, year-round outdoor activities, arts and culture, professional sports and abundant parks.

Our vibrant and diverse culture is evidenced by the many distinctive neighborhoods that dot our City. I invite you to walk our red brick, tree lined streets, visit our beautiful historic districts or our Downtown Arts District and take in Orlando’s crown jewel, Lake Eola Park.

Again, welcome to Orlando! We are happy to have you here and hope you enjoy taking part in the wonderful experiences that can only be found here.

Best wishes for a productive conference and continued success. I hope you enjoy your time here and I hope you visit Orlando again soon.

Sincerely,

Buddy Dyer
Mayor

84th Annual Conference

Dear SPSA participants:

I want to welcome you to our annual meeting. I am pleased and grateful that you have chosen to begin the new year with us. Ann Bowman, the chair of our program committee, her committee, and Executive Director Karen McCurdy and her SPSA staff have worked hard to assemble an interesting and informative program plan, and then to bring that plan to fruition. I believe that you will agree that they have done an excellent job.

The program includes a large selection of regular panels, plus round tables and special events. The committee has also included a number of “conferences within the conference”, something the SPSA helped to pioneer. I can tell you from experience that the in-depth experience those events provide are something special. I hope that when you have had the chance to benefit from some of these opportunities you will let Ann and Karen and their “crews” know that you appreciate all that they have done. Their efforts have created these valuable collective goods for us to enjoy and learn from.

I also hope that you will be able to take the opportunity to experience some of the many joys and wonders that the city of Orlando has available. From Mickey Mouse, to high culture, to killer whales, to fine dining, to Harry Potter, and more, there is a huge range of options available. Please be sure to take advantage of them.

Dave Rohde
2013 SPSA President

SUBSCRIPTION LUNCHEON & KEYNOTE ADDRESS

Jane Mansbridge has been interested in the interaction of power and persuasion, conflict and commonality, since her first book, Beyond Adversary Democracy.

In the late 1960s, motivated by the problems of self-governance in the many “participatory democracies” in which she and her friends were involved, she searched town meetings and workers’ cooperatives for good examples of direct assembly democracy. Through participant observation, interviews, archival materials, and survey research, she discovered many ways in which the usual patterns of class, gender, and race inequality revealed themselves in deliberative settings. But she also found that citizens considered these inequalities relatively unproblematic whenever they had many common interests with others and when they also had, for other reasons, a context of mutual respect and the capacity to develop and grow by taking responsibility for the whole.

Her second book, Why We Lost the ERA, used the same methods to uncover several dynamics that plague social movements. In the “dynamic of deafness,” for example, the incentives in volunteering typically lead activists in social movements to huddle together protectively, ignoring messages from the outside world. In the dynamic of “participatory decentralization,” the many-headed character of social movements makes them liable to work at cross-purposes, although it also opens them to far more new ideas than standard political organizations.

In the early 1990s, another mixed-method project based on interviews with low-income women produced “Everyday Talk in the Deliberative System” in Steven Macedo’s Deliberative Politics (1999), and “The Cultural Politics of Everyday Discourse: The Case of ‘Male Chauvinist,’” with Katherine Flaster (2007), which showed that concepts like “male chauvinism” could begin unintentionally with political activists and spread to non-politically involved “everyday feminists” through the evolutionary, emergent dynamic of “enclave variation and everyday selection.”

“Should Blacks Represent Blacks and Women Represent Women? A Contingent ‘Yes,’” JOP (1999) began Mansbridge’s work on representation, which developed into “Rethinking Representation,” APSR (2003), “Quota Problems: Combating the Dangers of Essentialism,” Politics and Gender (2006), “A ‘Selection Model’ of Political Representation,” the Journal of Political Philosophy (2009), and “Clarifying Political Representation,” APSR (2011).

Her recent work on deliberation includes two “deliberative co-authorships”: “The Place of Self-Interest and the Role of Power in Deliberative Democracy,” with eight co-authors, in JPP (2010) and “A Systemic Approach to Democratic Deliberation,” with seven co-authors, in Parkinson and Mansbridge’s Deliberative Systems (2012).

PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS
Dr. David Rohde

Friday, January 4, 2013
5:30 P.M. to 6:30 P.M.
Peabody Grand Ballroom V

David W. Rohde (Ph.D. University of Rochester, 1971) is Ernestine Friedl Professor of Political Science at Duke University, and Director of the Political Institutions and Public Choice Program. He has also held distinguished professorships at Michigan State University and the University of Florida.

Rohde has researched various aspects of American national politics, including the Congress, the presidency, the Supreme Court, and presidential and congressional elections. Rohde has been editor of the American Journal of Political Science (1988-1990), and chair of the Legislative Studies Section of the American Political Science Association (1991-93). In 2000, he was elected to membership in the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Rohde is the author of Parties and Leaders in the Postreform House (University of Chicago Press, 1991), and coauthor of a series of books on every national election since 1980, the most recent of which is Change and Continuity in 2008 and 2010 Elections (CQ Press, 2011). In 2010 he received the Samuel Eldersveld Career Achievement Award from the Political Organizations and Parties Section of the American Political Science Association.

Ralph Bunche SUMMER INSTITUTE SCHOLARS

The Ralph Bunche Summer Institute Scholars are attending the SPSA conference for the first time this year because they were displaced by the cancellation of the 2012 annual meeting of APSA where they traditionally present their research. We welcome them and invite you to join them at their poster session Friday morning in the Grand Rotunda beginning at 10:00 am. The posters will remain on display through the day Friday, so if you are in a panel of your own while the authors are present, you may contact them.

MEET THE Ralph Bunche SUMMER INSTITUTE SCHOLARS

UNIVERSITY OF GUAM

Laurie Ipanag Tumaneng is a senior at the University of Guam majoring in Political Science and Sociology. She attended the 2012 APSA Ralph Bunche Summer Institute, and her final research paper, "The ParticipAsian Problem: Exploring Low Political Participation Among Asian Americans," was among the ones chosen to present at the 2012 American Political Science Association Annual Meeting. Her research interests include colonialism and the politics and economics of development in Southeast Asia. Her interest in development and Southeast Asia was brought about through her research in Bali, Indonesia for a field school, which culminated in a book chapter entitled "Beyond the Three R's: Redefining the Concept of Education within Community Development." She plans to pursue her PhD and would like to further explore the connection between colonial history and development within her region of focus.

Angel Miguel Mira is a senior political science major at The University of Notre Dame. Primarily interested in comparative politics, he is a research assistant for Prof. Coppedge's Varieties of Democracy, a multi-year global endeavor aimed at gauging democracy in every country since 1900. His duties include legislative coding and research, country expert research, and survey and questionnaire coding. He is a Ralph Bunche Summer Institute Scholar, having participated in the program in the summer of 2012. His research paper, titled "Revisiting Black Poverty: Are Latinos the New Enemy?," explores the issue of socioeconomic conflict between urban Blacks and Latino immigrants, and its implications for minority political relations. His paper was selected for presentation at the 2012 American Political Science Association Annual Meeting. He intends on continuing his studies in a PhD program in comparative politics (focusing on democratization and party systems) in the fall of 2013.

Jasmine Brooks is a senior at Augustana College in Rock Island Illinois. Jasmine, a political science major, attended the 2012 APSA Ralph Bunche Summer Institute where she crafted a research paper on the domestic violence arrest policies entitled, "A Thin Line Between Love & Hate: The State's Role in Mandating Arrest Policies." Jasmine was asked to present her research at the 2012 American Political Science Association Annual Meeting. Jasmine is interested in researching the creation of legislation. She plans to pursue a PhD in political science in hopes of adding to the existing research on the intersection of American Government and minority women. Jasmine would like to give a special thanks to the APSA Ralph Bunche program, who she credits for motivating her to pursue higher education and shedding light on the wonders of research.

Renata Barreto is a senior at Reed College majoring in International and Comparative Policy Studies - Political Science, an interdisciplinary program that combines economics, history, and political science for a fuller understanding of the international system. She participated in the 2012 Ralph Bunche Summer Institute and wrote her research paper on "Assimilation Reconsidered: the Effect of Transnational Networks on the Civic Engagement of 1.5 and 2nd Generation Americans." Renata's research interests cover a variety of topics, from comparative race and inequality in Western democracies to the politics of poverty in the Middle East and Latin America. She hopes to pursue a PhD in Political Science in order to employ her quantitative skills to elucidate relationships in the social world. Renata is an avid glossophile—she has studied seven languages and is fluent in Spanish, French, and English. Furthermore, Renata is currently writing her senior thesis on land titling programs for urban squatter settlements in Lima, Peru.

MEET THE Ralph Bunche SUMMER INSTITUTE SCHOLARS

RICE

Angie M. Bautista-Chavez is a senior at Rice University majoring in Political Science and Policy Studies. Angie's research interests are in American politics and social policy, as viewed through the analytical lenses of racial and ethnic politics, Latino politics, and urban politics. Angie attended the 2012 APSA Ralph Bunche Summer Institute and was selected to present her research paper exploring the bureaucratic representation of Latino parents by Latino school administrators, "Latino School Leaders in Immigrant Communities," at the American Political Science Association's 2012 Annual Meeting. As a part of the Mellon Mays Undergraduate Fellowship Program and through the mentorship of Dr. Melissa Marschall and Dr. Brent Houchens, Angie has co-authored three conference publications on the outcomes of DREAM- Achievement through Mentorship, a Houston-based outreach program seeking to address the underrepresentation of minority students earning science, technology, engineering, and mathematics degrees. Angie seeks to pursue a doctoral degree in political science and a career in academia to understand how ascriptive characteristics of representatives affect the types of policies they advocate, the extent of descriptive and substantive representation by minority group representatives, and the ways structures and processes of political institutions affect the efforts of minority groups to secure political influence. Angie is eternally grateful for all of the mentorship she has received at Rice by faculty members and especially to her Mellon Mays mentor, political science professor Dr. Melissa Marschall, who has been instrumental in developing her knowledge of and passion for political science research.

Patricia Posey is a senior at the University of Florida majoring in Political Science and Sociology with a minor in Latin American Studies. She attended the 2012 APSA Ralph Bunche Summer Institute and was invited to present her research paper titled, "Location Means Participation: The Effects of Geographic Context on Latino Nonvoting Forms of Participation", at the American Political Science Association's 2012 Annual Meeting. She is a University Scholar and her academic interest range from race and race relations, political behavior, judicial politics and policy to Latin American politics. Her honor's thesis explores the relationship between social mobility in different racial groups and political efficacy. When she graduates, she hopes to pursue a PhD in Political Science.

Julia Cramer is a senior at James Madison University majoring in Political Science and Media Arts and Design. She attended the 2012 APSA Ralph Bunche Summer Institute and was asked to present her research paper titled "Finding Their Voice: Minority Perceptions of Media Bias and Their Effect on Political Participation" at the American Political Science Association's 2012 Annual Meeting. Julia is interested in researching political communication, campaigning and public opinion. Julia's motivation for pursuing a doctoral degree in political science and a career in academia is to understand the relationship between the media and the political sphere. Julia has benefited from the opportunities both JMU's Political Science department and the APSA Ralph Bunche Summer Institute have provided pertaining to her research interests and furthering her education.

Desiree Anderson is a senior at Randolph-Macon College with a double major in philosophy and international studies, with a concentration in international business economics. Her research interests include international economics, foreign policy, race in American Politics, and terrorism. Desiree attended the 2012 APSA Ralph Bunche Summer Institute and completed a research paper on the effects of racism on public opinion regarding the war in Iraq, entitled "Our Races Do Not Matter Anymore, Americans United Against the War." She also completed research, during the summer of 2011 through the Schapiro Undergraduate Research Fellowship, on the relationship between reason and desire in facilitating virtuous activity. Set to graduate in 2013, Desiree plans to pursue a PhD in international relations, with a focus on foreign policy and/or security studies.

Patricia Sidbury is a senior at Virginia State University majoring in Political Science. She attended the 2012 APSA Ralph Bunche Summer Institute where she wrote her research paper entitled, "Guess Who is Coming to Dinner: An Analysis of the Contact Theory on Attitudes Towards Homosexuals." Patricia is interested in researching the connection between the people and the government. Her research focuses on how social movements from the past can serve as a model for current social movements, such as the homosexual civil rights movement. Patricia's motivation for pursuing a doctoral degree in political science and a career in academia is to help discover ways for gay and lesbian Americans to achieve equal rights in the United States.

WEBER STATE UNIVERSITY

Lonald Wishom is a senior at Weber State University majoring in political science. He wrote a research paper entitled "From Planning Prom to Having the World in your Palms: the link between extracurricular activities and civic engagement" and attended the 2012 session of the APSA Ralph Bunche Summer Institute. Lonald is interested in learning more about the correlation between the quality and accessibility of student leadership positions and future political activity. He hopes that this research will cause people to place higher emphasis on students in predominantly minority and low income schools being given the same autonomy and decision making power as is given to those at parochial schools or affluent public schools. He feels that this will lead to increased feelings of efficacy amongst individuals who have not been historically encouraged to participate in the rules that govern the society in which they live and lead to more political participation. Lonald is great due to the Political Science Department and the office of Student Involvement and Leadership at Weber State University. These offices assisted him with the development of his research interests, they were also instrumental in Lonald developing an understanding of how to empower others to become part of the decision making processes that govern our world.

2013 Mini-Conferences

In 2013 the SPSA continues the innovation introduced two years ago of hosting extended discussions organized around a single theme. These mini-conferences offer the opportunity for a small community of scholars to set aside time together within the larger meeting. A room is set aside for the time requested, between 3 and 7 regular sessions which occur in succession. Whether these sessions are scheduled on a single day or straddling two days depends on the preferences of the organizer. Some are stand-alone sessions, while others are integrated with their related research section.

If you are interested in organizing a mini-conference to be held in conjunction with the 2014 SPSA meeting, contact William Jacoby (the 2014 Program Chair) or Karen McCurdy at the SPSA offices.

2013 MINI-CONFERENCES

GENDER, RACE, AND INTERSECTIONALITY

The Gender, Race, and Intersectionality Mini-Conference during the SPSA meeting seeks to identify and adapt lessons on advancing social justice from the gender, race, and intersectionality literature and apply them to political science home departments and institutions. We have already identified four strategies that will be the basis of the four panels for the conference within a conference: building women's leadership skills, organizing women, recruiting allies, and mobilizing resources. We have recruited prominent, diverse female political scientists with expertise in gender, race, and intersectionality, or who have extensive experience in the profession, to discuss these and other strategies that might advance diverse women faculty and change institutional practices and policies in home institutions.

All sessions meet in Bayhill 20

This first session of the CWC on Gender, Race, and Intersectionality would introduce an overarching theme of the entire CWC. Enhanced leadership skills are needed to increase the presence of diverse female political scientists in authoritative positions in their home departments and universities. Yet numbers do not suffice to address discrimination in the profession.

This second session of the CWC on Gender, Race, and Intersectionality would develop a central lesson from the gender and politics literature. To enhance diversity and address discrimination within political science departments and universities, diverse women political scientists not only need to develop leadership skills but also need to establish women's caucuses within their department, identify their shared priorities, and frame those priorities in ways that elicit support both among women and throughout their institution.

This fourth and final session of the CWC on Gender, Race, and Intersectionality demonstrates that diverse women political scientists who aim to enhance diversity and address discrimination within their home political science departments and universities should mobilize all of the types of resources discussed at the CWC. For example, women's caucuses should work with other like-minded organizations in departments, home institutions, and the discipline. If these organizations do not exist, advocates of change would be wise to promote them. They also need to work with allies to obtain material resources, information, and logistical support. These steps can transform practices and policies, facilitating the diversification of the profession.

Maximizing community engagement in the classroom: It's not just service learning anymore

Teaching Political Science

Modern students are looking for more value in their educational experiences, both professionally and personally. Some students focus on developing skills and networks that will improve their job prospects and ultimately the economic returns on their degrees. Other students are interested in learning meaningful ways to engage with and have an impact on local and global politics. Some still just want to change the world. Although these seem like very different objectives, providing meaningful community engagement opportunities can help students achieve these goals and more. Although service learning is the most recognizable form of community engagement, it is only one of many. From writing letters to political and community leaders, conducting program evaluation, designing and community based research projects, and taking students on study abroad trips, Political Science faculty are already doing a great deal of community engaged work. The issue is not the "do-ing", but considering why we are "do-ing" and thinking more about how these experiences can maximize student and faculty needs. Drawing on existing literature and some of the presenters own experience, the presentation will challenge faculty to begin to think more deliberately about planning and integrating the full spectrum of community engagement experiences across the curriculum. Special emphasis will be put on ways to integrate teaching, scholarship, and service to improve student learning objectives, fulfill faculty needs in research and service, and provide interesting ways to impact communities locally and globally.

Intensely ideological abortion politics have become the norm in the years since Roe v. Wade, with some ability to move public opinion. The right to use contraception and access to contraceptive services, on the other hand, had generally been perceived to be settled, even to the extent of including the right to contraception in fundamental privacy and liberty rights. In 2012, the landscape looked different. Two years of unrelenting attacks on Planned Parenthood, an unusually frank reintroduction of notions of "legitimate" rape and unsubstantiated claims that female bodies could not or would not permit impregnation as a result of rape seemed to cast the usual dialogue about the politics of reproductive health services backward. Most surprising of all was the framing of access to contraception, called a basic preventive service by the Institute of Medicine, as a threat to religious liberty. This roundtable parses the narrative while it assesses the degree to which reproductive health politics is mobilizing by engaging in a preliminary analysis of the 2012 election.

This roundtable panel explores the opportunities presented by partnerships and collaborations between political science departments and the public service institutes found at many colleges and universities. The roundtable will feature representatives from four institutes at universities in the South who will share their observations and views on strategies and approaches for political science departments to cultivate closer relationships with public service institutes. Although the panel will focus on positive examples of collaborations with academic departments, the representatives will also talk about challenges and limitations posed by such a relationship. The highlight of the panel will be the opportunity to fully engage the panelists and participate in a dialogue through a series of open-ended questions and interactive exchange between panelists and the audience.

The Roundtable discusses the performance of prediction models that made forecasts of the outcome of the 2012 presidential election; all these forecasts were issued in public outlets such as blogs and PS weeks, if not months ahead of Election Day. The Roundtable features the forecasters themselves, giving them an opportunity to explain why their model fared as it did and respond to criticisms from fellow forecasters and the audience.

This will be the fourth in a row event organized in collaboration with SPSA. RCLS has organized a special event with key note speaker, two expert panels that will work in a form of round table discussions and a business meeting. The RCLS sessions at SPSA will focus on legislatures in post authoritarian (and authoritarian) societies. What are the most challenging cases of developing legislatures? How do we measure change and democratization of developing parliaments? How do we measure what practitioners do and consequences of their work? Bringing together academics and practitioners is becoming the distinctive feature of the RCLS meetings in the USA. To that end we would like to continue our collaboration with practitioners from the World Bank Institute, USAID, and many other practitioners who are working with developing legislatures and parliaments in developing democracies.

Subsequent to, and following on the efforts of the Progressive Movement and the New Public Management, attention has been focused on performance and efficiency within the public administration. More recent attention to evidence-based practice suggests enhanced objectivity in decision making and performance is expected to follow. While EBP first penetrated the hard sciences, such as medicine and public health, its use has broadened across the gamut of public programs. Scholarship has advanced in reaction to this trend, and many studies have begun to investigate the use of performance evidence and its impacts specifically. The concern which remains is that EBP has been utilized nominally in fields of practice where evidence is lacking, where questions are political rather than instrumental, and where standards of evidence are lax, or at least not well understood. The expected result is that EBP use will yield inconsistent performance results to the extent it is applied to fields with varied capacity. This panel investigates the use of evidence in public policy and management decisions.

This roundtable will assess how President Obama has used the tools of the administrative presidency along with his unilateral powers during his first term in order to pursue his policy agenda. Members of the panel will also compare and contrast the use of these powers and policy tools by the Obama White House with recent presidents. For example, we will explore whether the Obama administration has followed suit with recent presidents in exercising such powers, or whether it has expanded or reduced the use of them. Finally, if President Obama has expanded presidential power, is this healthy for the American political system?

The panelists will address the unique problems and some common solutions to successfully integrating field research in their work.

Despite some fits and starts, democracy in Latin America has progressed beyond its initial transitional period. Although democracy is not equally sturdy in every corner of the region, the unique politics of transitions (O'Donnell and Schmitter 1986) has given way to more regularized patterns of electoral politics. At the same time, the field of comparative politics recently has seen nothing short of an explosion of interest in and studies of public opinion and political behavior in Latin America. One of the reasons for this is the availability of high quality public opinion data, as well as the introduction and acceptance of new methods and approaches to the study of comparative politics. And, yet, no single volume exists that takes stock of this quickly emerging field. These developments beg several questions about electoral behavior in Latin America: (1) Who votes? (2) What attributes and judgments influence vote choice? (3) What factors distinguish voters in Latin American countries from each other and from citizens in other contexts? This panel is part of a mini-conference that takes a broad and comparative perspective in answering these questions. Each paper focuses on one particular aspect or "ingredient" of the vote, and each chapter is authored by a specialist on that topic. The mini-conference's papers have a similar structure: (1) a discussion of the importance of that topic with respect to electoral behavior and Latin America; (2) a review of prior findings; and (3) new empirical analyses providing comparative perspective on the topic. A unifying theme is that voting behavior in Latin America can be partially understood by testing theoretical expectations borne out in empirical work in established democracies. However, just as contextual differences between the US and Europe reshaped the classic Michigan model offered by the authors of The American Voter (Campbell et al., 1960), our project identifies unique ways that Latin America's vastly different political, social, and economic contexts influence voting behavior. All papers use data from comparative public opinion projects, and their empirical analyses seek to illustrate trends across countries and/or time. Thus taking advantage of the recent growth in availability of survey and other election related data in Latin America, this mini-conference provides a comprehensive assessment of today's "Latin American Voter."

This panel will address the topic of representation and the U.S. Supreme Court in its relationship with two external constituencies. Representation will be considered in three senses. One relates to the general role of the institution in American governance. How is the Court today expected to be representative as an institution? A second is representation in relation to the content of the decisions of the Court (a la majoritarian/counter-majoritarian argument). A third is demographic/ideological representation. Are the justices today expected to embody representation of the American public? Representation will be discussed as it relates to the Court's relationship with two key constituencies: the press and the public. Do the press and the public expect representation from the Court and individual justices? If so, how is that manifested in the press and the public's relationship with the Court? How does it affect the justices' decision-making and actions off the bench? This was a theme panel at APSA. Participants for that panel will be the same at SPSA: Richard Davis, BYU, chair Valerie Hoekstra, Arizona State Joseph Mathewson, Northwestern Laura Moyer, LSU Jennifer Diascro, APSA

NEW JOURNAL FROM  CHICAGO
Journal of Law and Courts

A new journal for all members of the law and courts intellectual community

David E. Klein, Editor

The new peer-reviewed Journal of Law and Courts (JLC) aims to be the premier journal for members of the law and courts intellectual community in terms of quality and scope of articles and size and diversity of audience.

Sponsored by a political science organization but published for all scholars interested in legal institutions, actors, processes, and policy, JLC will be interdisciplinary and wide-ranging in substance. Dedicated to combating intellectual fragmentation and promoting communication and fertilization across traditional boundaries, it will not emphasize a particular theoretical or methodological orientation. Published articles will tackle substantively important theoretical or empirical questions, employ highly rigorous arguments and methods, and be written in a manner interesting and accessible to a wide audience of scholars.

JLC is published by the University of Chicago Press in association with the Law and Courts Organized Section of the American Political Science Association. The inaugural issue will publish in early 2013.

JLC is a long awaited and much needed scholarly endeavor. This is a very exciting development.

— Michael McCann, University of Washington

A CALL FOR PAPERS

Journal of Law and Courts is currently collecting papers for publication in its inaugural year. To submit your paper for consideration, or for inquiries regarding journal scope and submission rules, e-mail the editorial office at jlawcourts@virginia.edu, or visit www.journals.uchicago.edu/JLC.

AMERICAN POLITICAL THOUGHT:
A Journal of Ideas, Institutions, and Culture

The American Founding • Democracy • Constitutionalism • Equality • Liberty
Citizenship • Political Identity • The Role of State

Michael Zuckert, Editor

The University of Chicago Press is pleased to announce AMERICAN POLITICAL THOUGHT, the only peer-reviewed academic journal exclusively devoted to the study of American political thought. Interdisciplinary in scope, APT will feature research by political scientists, historians, literary scholars, economists, and philosophers who study the texts, authors, and ideas at the foundation of the American political tradition. Research will explore key political concepts such as democracy, constitutionalism, equality, liberty, citizenship, political identity, and the role of the state.

Developed in response to renewed vitality in the field, APT will publish research articles, review essays, and book reviews. Published in association with the Notre Dame Program in Constitutional Studies and the Jack Miller Center, a non-profit foundation. Two issues per year. ISSN: 2161-1580.

“A splendid idea for a new journal and one that is much needed as we Americans grope our way into an uncertain future.”— Gordon Wood, Winner of the 1970 Bancroft Prize, Recipient of the 1993 Pulitzer Prize in History, and Recipient of the 2010 National Humanities Medal.
